HAWLEY CONTINUESArgues for Prosecution in Haywood Case.*ORCHARD'S EVIDENCE CLEAR

During Argument Hawley Said Prosecution Expected Perjury On Part Of Esterly And Davis Takes Up Testimony Of Wood Regarding Explosion.

BOISE, Ida., July 20.—The trial of William D. Haywood, secretary and treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners which has occupied the District Court of Ada County for the last ten weeks has entered its last stage and James H. Hawley, leading counsel for the prosecution is now arguing to the jury that the evidence presented by the state proves the guilt of Haywood as a member to use his own words, "Of the worst band of conspirators that ever infested any section of this country."

Mr. Hawley has characterized Orchard's evidence as a plain story told without effort at concealment, without boastfulness and without fear. He points out that a cross-examination with out parallel in the trial of criminal cases failed to change the story in any one particular. He maintained that the confession of Orchard was due to the "Saving power of divine grace."

Quoting the law of conspiracy that every man connected by the evidence with a conspiracy or combination must be responsible for every act done and every word spoken by a member of the combination Mr. Hawley said it was a just law, because otherwise any man might preach abominable crime and then fall back claiming that his hands were clean, though the foulest crime resulted from his advice. On this advice he said, is based the charge against Haywood that he murdered Ex-Governor Steunenberg and on this was based the affidavit made by the county attorney to secure the extradition of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone. "Any statement," said Mr. Hawley, "that counsel for the defense may make to you charging that the extradition of these men was secured on a perjured affidavit is false and done merely for the purpose of distracting your attention and creating prejudice against the prosecution. We mean that under the plain law Haywood is guilty of the murder of Governor Steunenberg."

Mr. Hawley has reviewed the evidence of the blowing up of the Banker Hill and Sullivan concentrator at Wardner, for which he maintains the Western Federation of Miners through the acts of its officers, was responsible and in plain words charged wilful perjury against a number of witnesses brought by the defense to contradict Orchard's story of the crime.

He repeatedly anticipated the probable argument of counsel for the defense which he said will be directed toward exciting hatred towards some persons connected with the prosecution.

"You will," he said "hear charges brought against the murdered governor, who did his duty, no more, no less, when he established order in the Coeur d'Alene and called out soldiers wearing the uniform of the United States Army to ensure peace."

Mr. Hawley said that the state expected Esterly and Davis and Copley and Haywood and Moyer to swear that they had nothing to do with any of the crimes charged against them. He said he did not blame them for perjury themselves when they were charged with great crime.

Turning to Colorado the counsel referred to the evidence of Thomas Moore, who swore for the defense in showing that the explosion at the Vindicator mine was due to an accident. The killing of McCormack and Beck at the Vindicator he referred to as a heinous crime, but said a more awful crime was contemplated because the intention was to blow a whole carload of non-union men to eternity without warning. Mr. Hawley produced a plan of the mine and with a pointed cane showed the errors in Wood's testimony. He brought out photographs to show that the conditions Wood described were non-existent and finally he showed to the jury the pieces of the pistol which Wood said Beck carried in his pocket.

Mr. Hawley pointed out that Beck's body was not mangled and asked how this could be so shattered into scrap iron and no member of the man's body be torn away.

In conclusion of this feature of his enlargement, Mr. Hawley said:

WASHINGTON ITEMSShipbuilding Greatest in Fifty Years.*GUNBOATS ON GREAT LAKES*Kansas Millers Win Railroad Fight—Oregon Land Fraud Cases to be Thoroughly Investigated—Examination of Consular Body Prepared—

WASHINGTON, July 20.—After a fight lasting many, many years, the millers of Kansas this week won a long-delayed victory in the struggle with the railroads crossing their state. The Howard Mills Company was the complainant, but it evidently was backed by the mill owners of the whole state. The contention was that the Missouri Pacific and other lines unduly discriminated against Kansas flour and in favor of the product of California. This was done, it was declared, by exacting rates for the transportation of flour in excess of contemporaneous rates for carrying wheat. There was enough heated argument, for and against, in the rooms of the Interstate Commerce Commission to run a hot-air engine for a century of time.

"This man Wood at first impressed us with the idea that he was attempting to tell the truth, but we sent for the best men we could find to rebut him and we produced the superintendent of the mine, and a relative of Beck, who with tears in his eyes, told all he knew and when they had finished we knew that Wood told a deliberate untruth and told it for the purpose of assisting this defense."

He maintained that in this particular Orchard's story of using the pistol to fire the powder must stand unimpeached. Throughout Mr. Hawley's argument he repeatedly asked the jury to look for a motive for Orchard's crime or a motive for any of the crimes other than that of revenge or a determination on the part of the Western Federation of Miners to terrorize all who opposed them.

When the war of words died away and the opposing attorneys halted for breath, Commissioner Prouty unlimbered his judicial artillery. The result was that the Kansas millers are upheld, and the railroads are instructed to reduce the rates in accordance with the ruling. Now that the flour case is out of the way, it is expected that the victorious Kansans will undertake to bring a similar case before the commission in connection with tariffs on coal.

Thirty-eight candidates for consular positions took oral examinations this week in the rooms of the Third Assistant Secretary of State in the State Department. These oral examinations lasted one day, and written tests were made on two succeeding days. The determination of the Department to have none but competent men represent the United States abroad has led to the fixing of the percentage required to pass at 80, 10 points higher than that usually exacted in competitive examinations for positions under the government. Among the contestants are several graduates of the College of the Political Sciences of George Washington University. This institution, it is believed by officials of the Administration, eventually will solve the problem of the rejuvenation of the foreign lines desired by the government. So firmly convinced are the officials of this, that within the last few days permission was given to John Ball Osborne, chief of the bureau of trade relations of the State Department, to take a place on the faculty of this College of the Political Sciences, and he will deliver lectures on the consular service. The candidates this week were examined in one modern language, French, German or Spanish; natural, industrial and commercial resources of the United States; political economy; international, maritime and commercial law; American history and the history of Europe and South America and the Far East since 1850. There were other branches touched upon, but these were the chief ones taken.

It is likely that the question of labor will be prominently to the fore at the coming session of Congress. The National Association of Manufacturers, it is probable, will seek to bring about a more even distribution of labor throughout the country and will endeavor to solve the problem in another way through the promotion of industrial education and the establishment of reliable employment bureaus. Another phase of the work will be the support of such men as Congressman Littlefield and McCall, who incurred the displeasure and active opposition of labor unions through their treatment of certain legislation believed essential by the unions. The Manufacturers organization by no means intends to antagonize labor in any sense, but its supporters are of the opinion that such an open and above-board program will eventually result in drawing employer and employee closer together. It is well known that organized labor has a powerful lobby before Congress, and when certain measures advocated by this lobby, and deemed unwise by the National Association of Manufacturers, are introduced, the Association hopes by a direct appeal to the people of the United States to bring the question up fairly for popular approval or disapproval.

Another gunboat is to make its way to the Great Lakes, the State Department having been assured by the British government that no objection will be offered by that country. The vessel is the Don Juan de Austria, and it will raise anchor at Portsmouth, N. H., next week and start for its new station by way of the St. Lawrence river. It is assigned to the use of the Michigan naval militia and will make the second war vessel plying the waters of that Lake, the other being the converted yacht, Dorothea, the pride of the Illinois fresh water tars. The Don Juan de Austria is a trophy of the late war with Spain, having fallen prize to Admiral Dewey in the memorable fight in Manila Bay.

Some idea of the remarkable rejuvenation of an industry in which the United States at one time excelled, is found in the government report on the total tonnage of merchant vessels built in the United States in the fiscal year ending June 30. In that time 1463 vessels of 510,865 gross tons were constructed; this is the largest tonnage in half a century and has been exceeded only twice in American history. A striking feature of the report is the statement that during the twelve months 122 steel steam vessels of 360,685 tons were built, by far the greatest tonnage of this description in the history of the country. The remarkable feature of this, however, is found in the fact that of these steel steamers, 47 of 238,713 tons were built on the Great Lakes and
